

When Is The Best Time For Your Clients To Buy Travel Insurance?

The answer to this question is straightforward: your clients should secure travel insurance as soon as they have booked their holiday. The earlier a travel insurance policy is obtained, the sooner your clients are protected.

Everyone deserves a well-earned break. Whether your clients prefer relaxing by the pool or engaging in winter sports, enjoying their holiday free from stress is essential. Travel insurance plays a crucial role in safeguarding your clients trip and providing peace of mind while they are away from home. Given life's unpredictability, securing the right coverage is vital.

What many may not realise is that there is an optimal time to purchase travel health insurance. Obtaining it early not only protects your clients financial investment in the event their trip is canceled but also enables more effective planning, particularly for individuals managing long-term health conditions.

Why should your clients have travel insurance?

There are numerous reasons to secure a travel insurance policy. Whether your clients require coverage for multiple trips or a single holiday, a comprehensive travel insurance plan can protect them against potential financial losses while traveling. This protection typically includes coverage for medical emergencies, death, trip cancellation and curtailment, loss of luggage, travel delays, and damage to personal property.

Travel insurance is especially critical for individuals with long-term medical conditions or illnesses. While high-risk medical travel insurance may come at a higher cost than standard policies, it provides enhanced protection in the event of an incident abroad. Additionally, Brown & Brown offer specialist coverage for higher-risk activities and extreme sports—including surfing, skiing, snowboarding, and rock climbing—that are generally excluded from standard travel insurance policies.
